

The T Shirt Seller?

When I was approached to write a little something about what hashing meant to me I thought "Great, sure, that would be easy". I got home, sat down and started thinking. Very quickly, I realized I had so many stories about so many places and good times because of the Hash House Harriers, I didn't know where to begin.

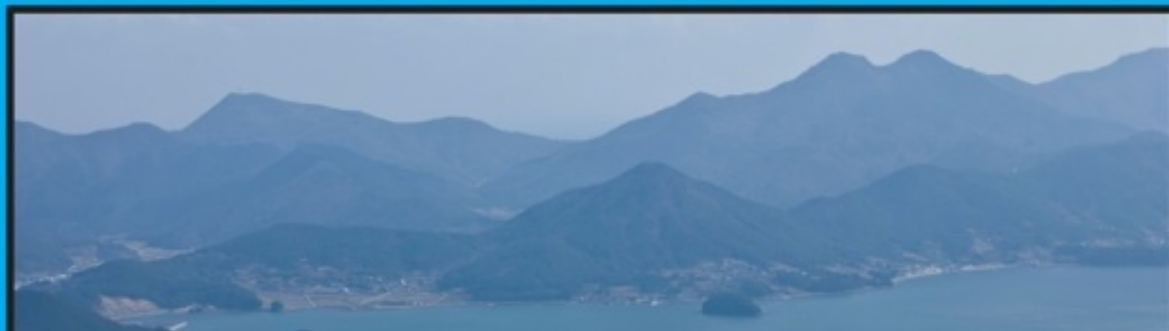

As previously written by others within the hash (un-) organization, this is a group that is open to every one of all ages, genders, sizes, and athletic abilities. It is a group with one common goal which is to have fun, meet new people, and enjoy a bit of fitness. To me, it goes WAY beyond this. I have been a hasher for over 7 years and am privileged to belong to a group that has been around so long and has influenced so many people world-wide. I began hashing in early 2003 and been addicted to it ever since, even to the point where I have planned vacations to places based on the hash group in that city.

or you may know, the hashes in Seoul and surrounding areas are not the family oriented environments that we observe (or try to) here on Geoje BUT they are still as much a big family as any group I have ever experienced which is a big reason why I am still, to this day, proud to call myself a hasher with the mother hash of the Southside Hash House harriers in Seoul. Being transplanted down here in Geoje just a few short months ago I knew I was in for a change in environment and behaviour. Now, after experiencing the friendship and support everyone seems to show each other, I couldn't see this hash any other way. It's great having the kids around, getting involved in the circles, and helping out. I think it keeps us all young, or at least young at heart.

I have been lucky enough to travel and hash all over southeast asia with runs in Cambodia, Vietnam, Thailand, Taiwan, China, Hong Kong, Japan, Bali, and the Philippines just to name a few. All have been different and all have been great in their own ways. I have experienced having to swim through rivers in Vietnam, climb mountains through jungles in Thailand, and even run through mine fields in Cambodia all because of the Hash house Harriers.

Although I have those experiences, and will never forget them, I am now happy to call the Geoje Do Hash House Harriers my home. I look forward to seeing more new faces this 28th anniversary and wish the hash all the best for the next 28

years.
