Driving Engagement through Talent Development

Employee Engagement has measured surprisingly low in the United States for many years. The Gallup organization reports an average of only 30% of workers as engaged. This means 70% of our workforce is likely just going through the motions, or worse, disrupting the organization or actively seeking other employment.

Nick Ryberg of Hunter-Ross will discuss why we see high engagement companies consistently outperform their competitors across key business metrics including profitability, employee turnover, safety incidents, product quality and customer performance.

- Learn about the four pillars of engagement: job fit, manager impact, culture and team dynamics.
- Learn how these four pillars must be developed together to create a strong employee engagement strategy.

Achieve long-term business success through best in class employee engagement and talent alignment.
